

Market Week: January 9, 2012

The Markets

So far, so good: The new year got off to a moderately encouraging start, beginning with solid reports on manufacturing and construction and ending with a fourth month of improved employment data. The Nasdaq took the lead; it was the first week since early October in which its gains outpaced those of the other three domestic indices. Not surprisingly, the Global Dow continued to be sluggish.

Last Week's Headlines

- Unemployment fell in December for the fourth straight month, hitting 8.5%; that's almost a full percentage point from last December's 9.4%. The Bureau of Labor Statistics said employers added 200,000 net new jobs, with the biggest gains occurring in transportation/warehousing, retail, and manufacturing. The measure of unemployment that includes underemployed workers also fell; it's down from 15.6% to 15.2%.
- U.S. manufacturing growth accelerated in December, according to the Institute for Supply Management. The ISM's index hit 53.9%, its highest level since June; it was the 29th straight month of expansion. Meanwhile, the Commerce Department said new durable goods orders also rose by 3.8%. The growth, driven primarily by new orders for aircraft and other transportation equipment, represented the fourth increase in the last five months.
- The Federal Reserve will start spelling out its expectations for the direction of short-term interest rates, including when it might start to raise rates. The forecasts will be made quarterly beginning with the January 25 release of other Fed economic forecasts, which will include projections for the end of this year.
- Expansion in the U.S. services sector picked up at a faster pace in December as the Institute for Supply Management's index rose 0.6% to 52.6%. It was the 26th consecutive month of growth, with 11 of the index's 18 industries reporting improvement.
- The average interest rate on 30-year fixed mortgages fell to 3.91% during the first week of 2012. According to mortgage giant Freddie Mac, that's as low as it's ever been. It also was the fifth straight week of rates under 4%.
